PODAR COLLEGE COUNSELING CELL

In-charge-Dr. Anil Kumar Sharma
Head of Department Hindi, Podar College, Nawalgarh.

Member (1):- Prof. Pramod Saini
Head of Department English Podar College, Nawalgarh.

Member (2):- Prof. Sudhir Jangid
Assistant Professor English Department, Podar College, Nawalgarh.

Adjustment difficulties of college students have been an emerging issue. Numerous studies have proven that adjustment difficulties such as appetite disturbances, concentration problems and depression are most pronounced in newcomers. In order to help college students resolve their adjustment issues, we attempted, for the present study, in the form of establishing a counseling system to provide interventions to students so that their social and emotional problems could affect their academic performance. Don't interfere.

Counseling is an activity that uses interpersonal relationships to enable people to develop self-understanding and make changes in their lives. We chose to examine the relationship between college counseling experience and academic performance in a sample of freshmen. Freshmen are more likely to experience loneliness, low self-esteem, and higher frequencies of life expectancy than their superiors.

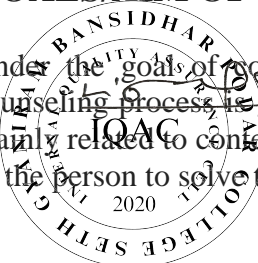

PURPOSE

- To explore the relationship between academic performance and mentorship.
- To explore the relationship between the number of sessions and academic performance.

In practicality, it is seen that the behavior of some people is such that some problems often arise in front of them and their reaction in relation to the solution of that problem is such that they need to solve the problem the most. The first requirement is the lack of insight of the individual. Therefore, the main goal of a counselor in counseling is to develop insight into the counselor. The problem is not solved, but the complexity of their problem/problems goes on increasing. The main reason for this happening is the lack of insight in that person or counselor. Therefore, the special goal of counseling in counseling is that there is insight in the counselor. The development of insight and self-realization is a continuous process which is related to all the processes like counseling, development and psychotherapy. The development of insight helps counseling to analyze the causes of their problems, behavior change, treatment and problem solving.

GOALS/AIM OF COUNSELING

Under the goals of counseling, counselors, counselors and intermediate classes are included. The counseling process is goal-oriented. The goals of counseling are very broad. Some of these goals are mainly related to contemporary life. Whereas some other goals are basically concerned with the ability of the person to solve the possible problems in the future.

COUNSELING GOALS

In the context of counseling goal setting, mainly three things are basically worth noting, which are as follows-

It is not always appropriate to focus on the means by ignoring the ends. Psychologists have developed many tests and techniques to determine the needs and problems of a person for counseling. It is inappropriate to give more importance to the means or the end in counseling.

Behavioral improvement oriented - The result of the activation of psycho motors can be seen as changes in the behavior of the person when problems arise in the normal behavior of the person in addition to the mental disorders. It is a kind of practical improvement i.e. symptom alleviation. Counseling should be practical in situations like symptoms related to psychosomatic disorders, functional/functional difficulties in normal tasks, irritability.

Development Goals - Developmental goals are those in which the client is helped to achieve anticipated human growth and development (eg, social, personal, emotional, cognitive, physical, etc.).

Preventive Goals - A preventive goal is one in which the counselor helps the counselor to avoid unwanted consequences.

Enhancement Goals - If the counselor has specific skills and abilities, they can be identified and developed with the help of the counselor.

Remedial Goals - Treatment means to treat the unwanted development of the counselor.

Exploratory Goals - Exploratory Goals represent goals that test appropriate alternatives and skills and examine new different activities, environments and relationships, etc.

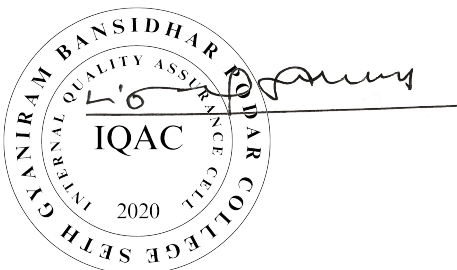

Exploratory Goals - Exploratory Goals represent goals that test appropriate alternatives and skills and examine new different activities, efficient environments and relationships, etc.

Reinforcement Goals - Reinforcement is used when the counselor needs help to recognize that what they are doing, thinking and experiencing is correct.

Cognitive Goals- Cognition involves achieving the primary basis of learning skills.

Physiological Goals- Physiology involves acquiring a primary understanding and habits to maintain good health.

Psychological Aims - Psychology is helpful in developing social interaction skills, learning, emotional control, positive, self- concept etc.
